The Political Environment of Bureaucratic Power - The Political Environment of Bureaucratic Power by GreggU 558 views 3 years ago 4 minutes, 41 seconds - Like most government institutions, administrative agencies function within complex frameworks of widely scattered legal and ...

Intro

POWER Both the formal structure of governmental power and the actual competition for power reflect a lack of centralization in the political system.

COMPETITION Competition for power includes conflicts among the branches of government, within the two major political parties, and continual fighting for position among interest groups.

LEVERAGE Wide dispersal of political power both constrains and creates opportunities for stakeholders to gain leverage in an area of policy.

AUTHORITY Most of the time legislators delegate to administrators the authority necessary to craft specific meaning into provisions of the law and then to implement them.

SUPPORT Presidents, who might be expected to provide leadership for bureaucracy from a relatively solid base of political support, ordinarily lack the sort of backing that would allow them to take unequivocal policy positions.

RELATIONSHIPS Second, the amount of independence bureaucratic agencies have in any specific situation is influenced by the power relationships they have with other politicians and institutions.

COALITIONS In their quest for "sufficient power," bureaucratic agencies seek support from coalitions of interest groups which in turn are organized to pursue policy objectives of their own.

DECISION-MAKING On the other hand, government institutions also serve as arenas of political competition, where various forces contend for dominant influence in decision-making processes.

TACTICS Also at issue every time Congress makes a decision is control of the way the question is presented, possible amendments, use of numerous tactics to speed up or delay consideration, and other tactical questions.

BALANCE Administrative agencies try to strike a manageable balance between what they can do to further their own interests and what they must do to ensure their survival.
