The Camping Journal

If capturing all of those special Memories, Moments and Experiences of your camping adventure is important to you, then keep reading.. Following far too many amazing camping adventures with friends and family that simply blended into one, I decided to create The Camping Journal! I was no longer prepared to take the chance of forgetting some of the most important and memorable moments I would ever experience. From personal experience, I felt that it was important to design this journal so fellow campers could record all of their details in the one handy location. Take a quick look by using the 'Look Inside Feature' and check out the first few pages for yourself. The format for section 1 includes: (1) Key details of the journey (2) The features and information of each camping site (3) Overall satisfaction of the camping ground and amenities (4) Details of your experiences, adventures and activities (5) Memories, moments and the people you met At the back of the Camping Journal, three additional sections have been included: 1. Extra pages for photos 2. Log the details of other campers to stay in contact 3. Service & Maintenance Log for your RV Product Overview: - Over 120 pages to capture and record your camping details and experiences. - Divided into four sections to also include photos, contact details and vehicle maintenance log - 8.5 x 11 inch to provide ample space to include information + larger font size - 2-page format per trip with prompted questions to assist with recalling information - Appealing and unique cover design with gloss cover for extra durability - Now a choice of Paperback or Hardback. You choose what is best! (This option may not be available in all countries). I wanted The Camping Journal to be our fully comprehensive journal with everything we needed and now I hope you will use it to capture all of your camping adventures too. You could call it the Perfect Camping Companion! Happy Camping!

Insight Myanmar Episode 1: Thabarwa Sayadaw - Insight Myanmar Episode 1: Thabarwa Sayadaw by Better Burma 1,285 views 4 years ago 2 hours, 21 minutes - Subscribe the "Insight Myanmar," podcast on your preferred podcast app! This inaugural talk with Thabarwa Sayadaw focuses on ...
Despite being born in Myanmar, Sayadaw did not have full rights of citizenship because of his family's Chinese ancestry. This prevented him from pursuing his dream of higher education, so he instead embarked on a business career by opening a convenience store franchise. Although he became quite successful—and at a time when entrepreneurs were extremely rare in Myanmar, no less—the stress led to a series of mental breakdowns that ultimately brought him to meditation. After initial experiences in the Mogok and Thae Ingu traditions, it was the vipassana courses he took at the Dhamma Joti Vipassan Center, in the tradition of S.N. Goenka, which propelled him to seek full ordination and become a monk.

Thabarwa Sayadaw's initial meditation center occupied just half of a residential apartment building in downtown Yangon, before he eventually moved to some undeveloped land that had been offered to him in Than Lyin, across Yangon River. He was followed by a small number of disciples, who under Sayadaw's leadership had begun caring for a growing number of refugees as well as others living on the margins of society. This group would eventually number in the thousands and became wholly reliant on the care provided by Thabarwa volunteers. This non-conventional approach on the part of a Burmese abbot, coupled with the development of a non-prototypical Buddhist monastery, ultimately resulted in a tense stand-off between him and senior members of the SaEgha, along with government authorities who wanted them evicted (). Ultimately it was the opening of the country and especially the freedom of the press that ended Thabarwa's existential fears and opened a new chapter in their development.

At the end of the podcast, Zach Hessler, a former forest monk in Myanmar, joins Joah to reflect on the Thabarwa story. They note how the Sayadaw's critical nature sets him apart in a culture where conformity and mimicry is often the standard. Joah compares Sayadaw's hunger for wisdom with that of a 19th century Burmese monastic, Ledi Sayadaw, and Zach comments on the deep faith that Sayadaw holds about the power of good deeds.
