For roughly two-thirds of children with ADHD, symptoms linger beyond puberty and impact daily life as an adult.

When people are talking to me, I often drift off or tune out.

I find myself tapping a pencil or my foot to work off nervous energy.

I have a hard time remembering appointments or obligations.

I regularly misplace or have difficulty finding things at home or at work.

When given a task, I usually procrastinate rather than doing it right away.

I have difficulty getting organized.
