COFFEE BEANS

This is how coffee is made in Costa Rica

Doka Coffee Estate Alajuela, Costa Rica

The Vargas family started Doka Coffee in 1940.

They harvest over 100,000 pounds of coffee cherries per week.

A truck dumps the cherries into a tank where they are separated by weight.

Ripe, heavier cherries sink while lower-quality ones float.

They also spread beans out to dry in the sun.

The beans are flipped every five minutes so they won't overheat.

The tour takes visitors all the way to the roasting room and final product.

Mario Fernandez General Manager "...and the coffee agriculture of Costa Rica which is part of our history."
