Winter temperatures regularly fall to -40°C, and the lowest ever recorded was a staggering -66°C All vehicles in Yakutsk are built to withstand extreme weather with temperatures below minus 35°C Those who own cars, park their vehicles in heated garages with a blanket wrapped around the battery

When they drive, they keep the engine running all day

When it's -50/-60°C outside, an unprotected car freezes within minutes: all liquids inside thicken, the rubber parts become brittle and fall apart

The right clothing is crucial. For maximum warmth, it's all about fur: reindeer boots, muskrat hats, and fox coats

Winter in Yakutsk lasts from October to April

Yakutsk has a decent public transport system that functions even in extreme cold. People travel to work and school by bus, or hail a taxi if it's late at night

Because of the permafrost there are no underground car parks in Yakutsk

Permafrost is ground that continuously remains below 0°C

Yakutsk is a Russian port city on the Lena River, in east Siberia

After winter ends it will come springtime with pleasant weather, but comes with its own problems: the thawing of all the ice and snow can result in severe floods
