Bridging the Digital Divide: Lessons From COVID-19

The Digital Divide is Real and Matters Connection and time barriers also exist and are important to identify (does each student have a device that allows for full participation in online learning activities and a stable, high-speed internet connection, and time and connection capacity to fully engage in synchronous course learning activities?)

The Digital Divide is Real and Matters Survey students before class begins: • Conditions for learning (safety first) • Broadband access • Devices and software access • Work and family obligations • Open-ended questions about needs for additional support or things

Intentionally building transparency into your course and assignment design is another important strategy to support student learning and engagement.
