These 18th Century Russian Churches Were Constructed Without Nails | National Geographic -

These 18th Century Russian Churches Were Constructed Without Nails | National Geographic by National Geographic 40,421 views 5 years ago 1 minute, 40 seconds - About National Geographic: National Geographic is the world's premium destination for science, exploration, and adventure.

This outdoor museum on Russia's Kizhi Island-which sits in the center of Europe's second largest lake-is a testament to the master woodworking skills of the 18th century.

Beyond their beauty, the churches are remarkable for the fact that not even a single nail was used in the construction of these houses of worship.

The Church of the Transfiguration has 22 domes made with interlacing wood shingles and rises 121 feet (37 meters) into the sky.

The adjacent Church of the Intercession is slightly smaller, reaching a height of 105 feet (32 meters). these buildings were included on the UNESCO World Heritage site list in 1990.
