Four Arguments for the Elimination of Television

Mander's four arguments in the book to eliminate television are that telecommunication removes the sense of reality from people, television promotes capitalism, television can be used as a scapegoat, and that all three of these issues negatively work together.

Four Arguments for the Elimination of Television

Mander successfully argued that television is subtly destructive to human beings and is not capable of reform any more than a gun could be modified to grow vegetables instead of shooting bullets. A gun does what a gun does, and television does what television does.

Four Arguments for the Elimination of Television - Wikipedia

Jerry Mander's arguments for the elimination of television are not easily refutable, and that's trouble (for me, for humanity, etc.). This book is a well-reasoned and researched dismantling of television, and the tendencies of our culture that paved the road for television's arrival.

Four Arguments for the Elimination of Television

by J Mander · Cited by 1266 — Argument 1 – TV conditions us to accept someone else's authority. Artificial environments deprive us of a direct knowledge of nature. Our knowledge is limited to the created environment, and so we know only what we are told by “the creator” of that environment.

Four Arguments for Eliminating Television - On the Wing

It doesn't add up. Making decent television programmes is expensive. A modest grasp of economics is enough to work out that the more channels there are the fewer viewers each will have, thus generating less advertising income in each case, and less money to spend on programmes.

Four hundred arguments for the elimination of television

A total departure from previous writing about television, this book is the first ever to advocate that the medium is not reformable. Its problems are inherent in the technology itself and are so dangerous to personal health and sanity, to the environment, and to democratic processes that TV ought to be eliminated ...

Four Arguments for the Elimination of Television

14 Aug 2017 — So, yes, let's talk about it. These are Jerry's four arguments for the elimination of television: The Mediation of Experience, The Colonization of Experience, Effects of Television on the Human Being and The Inherent Biases of Television.

Revisiting "Four Arguments for the Elimination of Television"

How to achieve the elimination of television? I certainly cannot answer that question. It is obvious, however, that the first step is for all of us to ...
